Global Home Health & Hospice Market

Executive Summary

Health is a fundamental right of every human being and a global social goal. Health is important for the understanding of basic wants and needs and to achieve the status of good and better lifestyle. Healthcare is the preservation or improvement of one's health via the detection, supervision, cure, recovery, or healing of disease, sickness, wound, and other psychological and bodily disabilities in the human body. Common types of healthcare treatments are therapy, enteral nutrition, private duty nursing, personal care, hospice and home health.

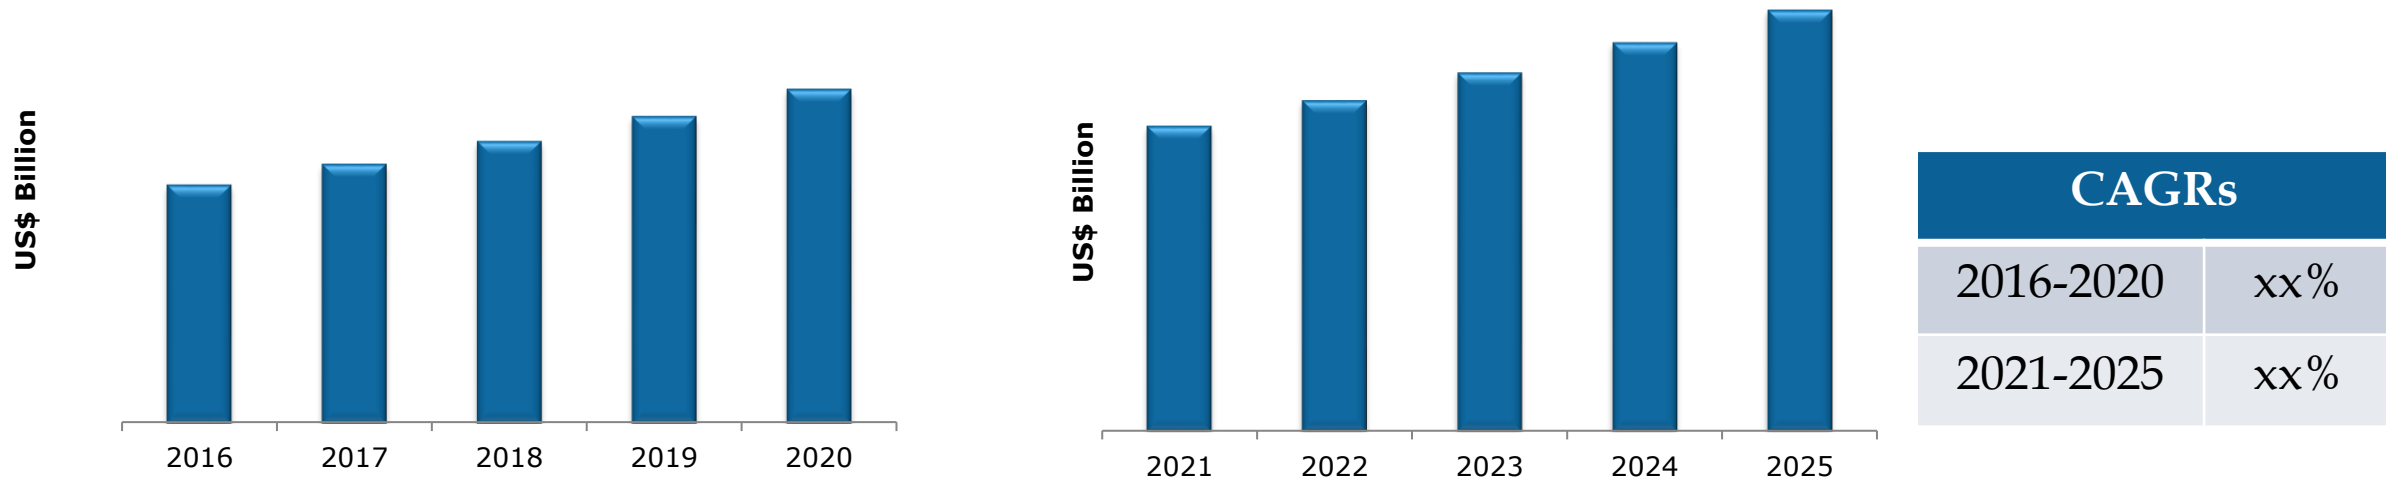

Home healthcare comprises a wide range of healthcare services for illness or sickness in homecare settings. The goal of home healthcare is to treat sickness, wound or disease and improve health results of the patient. These services are more convenient, effective and less expensive and are efficient treatment for chronic diseases and serious illness, aging population, and nutrition therapy of the patient. Hospice healthcare aims on the supervision, comfort, and wellbeing of a patient with a serious sickness who have a short lifespan. Hospice provides comprehensive comfort care as well as support for the family. Hospice care is given for a patient with an extreme sickness whose physician believes that the patient has less time to live if the sickness runs its genuine course.

The home health market can be segmented on the basis of service, named as; skilled care and unskilled care.

The global home health & hospice market has increased significantly during the years 2016-2020 and projections are made that the market would rise in the next four years i.e. 2021-2025 tremendously. The home health & hospice market is expected to increase due to aging population, growing gross national income, increasing prevalence of cancer cases, inversing healthcare spending worldwide, growing urbanization and governments supporting home health & hospice care. Yet, the market faces some challenges such as safety concerns of the patients, shortage of home health nurses or workers and degree of competition.
