The US Automated Dispensing Machines Market

Executive Summary

Automated Dispensing Machines are electronic storage units for medications. These machines aim to reduce the medication and dispensing error. These machines can only be used by authorized users, as they are secured with authenticated passwords and biometrics for inventory control and security of the drugs.

Automated dispensing machines are considered as the potential instrument to improve efficiency and patient safety. The two main categories of automated dispensing machines include Centralized Systems and Decentralized Systems.

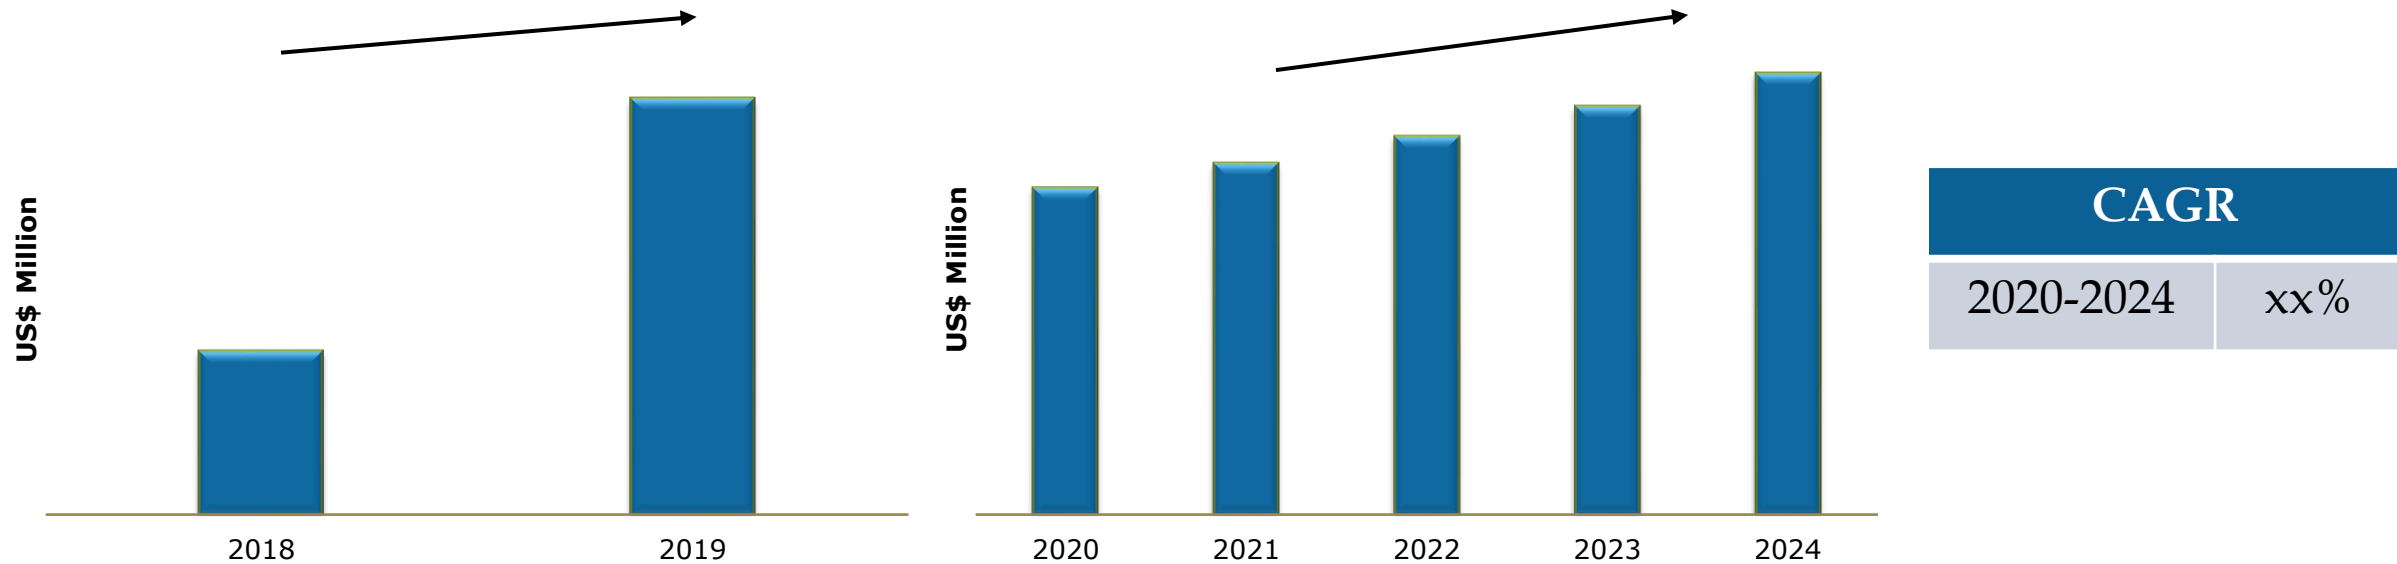

The benefits of automated dispensing machines include that these machines simplify the process, increase operation efficiency, reduce the medication error rate, provide drug-allergy alerts, and optimize drug inventory.

The automated dispensing machines market can be segmented on the basis of type (Decentralized Systems and Centralized Systems); application (Out-patient and In-patient); and end-user (Retail Pharmacies, Hospital Pharmacies, and Others).

The US automated dispensing machines market has increased significantly during the years 2018-2019, and projections are made that the market would rise in the next four years i.e. 2020-2024 tremendously. The automated dispensing machines market is expected to increase due to rising incidence of chronic diseases, aging population, favorable government initiatives for promoting the use of automated dispensing machines, rising incidence of medication error, etc. Yet the market faces some challenges such as problems associated with automated dispensing machines, high cost involved, etc.
