Executive Summary

A countertop is defined as a horizontal work surface which is found in the kitchens or other food preparation areas, bathrooms, lavatories and workrooms. They are used to keep materials like utensils and grocery. Countertops are generally installed upon and supported by cabinets. A variety of materials are being used for making countertops, which have various heat and scratch resistant properties.

The countertop market can be segmented on the basis of material type and end sector. On the basis of material type, the global countertop market can be further segmented into granite, solid surfaces, quartz, laminates and marbles. On the basis of end sector, the market can be divided into residential and commercial.

The global countertops market is expected to grow at a healthy rate during the projected period (2017-2021). The growth in market is expected on account of many growth drivers such as increase in number of food serving outlets, preference for spacious kitchens and multiple bathrooms, upsurge in disposable income and rise in number of hotel rooms worldwide. However, the market also faces some challenges like increasing rates of interest, rising sales price of existing homes and also the disadvantages of granite countertops discouraging people to purchase these countertops. Increasing urbanization, rising preference for quartz countertops, evolution of ultra compact surface countertops and rise in number of nuclear families are some of the latest trends in the global countertops market
